

Becoming a Savvy News Consumer

Living in a world of 24/7 news and social media may make it more difficult to determine the actual facts about an event. Fast-moving crisis situations are particularly prone to generating misinformation, such as rumors, inaccuracies, and theories or speculation.

When you first learn about a news event, keep these points in mind:

- Consider the source. Is the information coming from a reputable news outlet or verifiable source? If you are watching an interview or speech, has the person provided supporting facts to back their assertions?
- Acknowledge your biases. Your personal political and social preferences may influence how you react to a news story. Before responding with outrage, learn as many facts as you can.
- Check the date. If you are reading an older news story or post, search for follow-up stories to learn whether or how the situation has been resolved.
- Read past the headline. Often, headlines are written to attract attention or focus on the worst-case scenario. Read the story in full to learn the actual facts.
- Confirm using multiple sources. It's a good idea to visit at least two or three different outlets to verify facts and compare details.
- Research the issues. Complex world events are difficult to understand from soundbites and social media posts. Commit to learning about the subject in more detail.
- Beware of parodies. Parody news and social media accounts are sometimes mistaken for legitimate sources. Watch out for "deepfakes" (digitally manipulated media) as well.
- Set limits. Too much time on news or social media sites can be stressful. If you are feeling overwhelmed, step away and engage in a relaxing activity for a while.

A constant diet of bad news may leave you feeling stressed or anxious. LifeMatters can help you cope with your feelings and set healthy boundaries.
